PERIOD FAD RULES IN DRESS.

Louis Ideas Most Often Seen in Smart Dinner Gowns.

your Handsome Gowns That Show the Prevailing Styles and One Ornamented With Silver Paillettes-Pompadour Freeks of Flowered Silks Well Liked -Flowered Silks and Mousselines Prettier Than Ever-Decided Vogue fer Ribbon Trimmings Princesse Models in Velvet and Broadeloth -Luxury in Evening Coats and Wraps.

As the holiday season draws near life becomes more and more strenuous in the dressmakers' workrooms and festive attire is the order of the day. Every well dressed woman had her winter street frock ready last month and a majority had their dressy afternoon visiting frocks as well, but evening gowns, dinner gowns, house cowns, all the outfit for the holiday round of gayety and for the Christmas house parties, which are becoming more of a social feature in this country each year -these are being rushed through now and are driving dressmakers to the verge of nervous prostration.

The dinner gowns of the season are particularly attractive, and the period fads, so popular just at present, give wide latitude to dinner gown modes. There have a seasons when this period or that held full sway, and women short or tall, fat or lean, conformed to fashion's mandate; but now one may choose from any one of a half dozen periods and still be in the height

Possibly the Louis ideals are those most frequently developed in the smart dinner gowns, but the average dressmaker's ideas to where Louis XV. lines end and Louis XVI. lines begin are delightfully vague, and in its ultimate expression her Louis frock is a complicated mixture of the two periods. If, however, she is artist enough to make her general, effect harmonious,

my quibble about a rever here or a button

Some one has said that it is woman's versational duty to be socially charmag, not statistically correct, and though essful departures from precedent require cleverness and skill, it is the whole duty of a frock to be sartorially charming, not historically accurate. There are, however, a few things it is well to remember, tuse the details of a certain mode were meny, and any audacious change or vation is likely to destroy the balance duce large and fanciful sleeves upon the Louis XV. coats and to drape Marie Antoinette fichus over blouses or bodices and sleeves so full that the fichu is fairly sure

by the best Parisian makers will show that | trimmed the draped elbow sleeves.

ing color of a dove's breast, were massed in heavy ornaments around the bottom of the gown and around the décolletage and were the gewn's only trimming save for numerous frothy frills of yellowish old lace to look awkward and bunglesome.

An examination of the models sent out that softened the line of the décolletage and in a narrow but heavy line and massed as centres to the flowers. There was a bolero effect of the appliqué panne on tulle, and tiny plissé frillings of tulle with lines of shirring paillettes to edge them formed the elbow sleeves, finished the décolletage and filled in the blouse front between the bolero fronts and above the folded girdle of they are making no such mistakes, and our | More simple and girlish was a little frock soft bow. This arrangement is not new, but an originality of effect is given by the little frills of deep yellowish lace which peep from under the edges of the ribbon.

Lace borders the décolletage, trims the short sleeves and is used upon the skirt in rather odd fashion. Three narrow lace frills run around the skirt about at the knee line above a full flounce of mousseline and above them is a deep lace flounce with a heading. This deep flounce is not however left to fall freely, but is drawn down and held by little square bows set on around the skirt

If this trimming set so high on the skirt is not becoming, it may very well be lowered home dressmakers would do well to follow failures as are at the moment too frequently seen.

sending out four handsome dinner gowns on a certain stormy afternoon of last week and was willing to display them before laying them away in their tissue paper wrappings.

One was of Louis XV. lines, with a long coat of striped pink and silver silk over a skirt of pink mousseline trimmed in lace and little garlands of small silver tissue roses. Lace and silver roses were used to trim the décolletage and silver roses were applied to the plain pink silk cuffs turned back on the close sleeve, just at the elbow, and upon the revers.

The use of silver is conspicuous among the best models for dinner and evening wear, and the mention of it leads us to digress from the dinner gown topic long enough to call attention to an exceedingly successful evening frock pictured in one of the cuts here.

The frock was of white tulle highly pailletté in silver, and around the very full skirt were festooned garlands of tiny silver roses. A bertha of tulle and roses finished the décolletage, which, though round, obtained a square effect from shoulder straps of tulle thickly pailletté in silver.

There were the smallest excuses for sleeves in the form of butterfly bows of tulle, into whose centres were tucked little clusters of sliver roses. The girdle was of cloth of silver. The model was created for a young matron; but, with less pronounced décolletage and more pronounced sleeves, it would be an ideal dancing frock for a débutante.

Going back to the dinner gowns, for which the tissue wrappings are still waiting. usually planned with a view to general there was one princesse gown of dove gray velvet, intended for the young and pretty mother of one of the season's stantes. Gray paillettes matching the of white chiffon absolutely self-trimmed, without even a scrap of lace, but more elaborate than it seemed because of the hand work in its shirrings and cordings and tucks.

The full skirt was laid in tucks from the hem to a point half way between knees and hip line, the tucks graduating from three inches in width at the bottom to an inch in width at the top. A shallow yoke of very fine close cording held the skirt closely for a few inches below the waist band, and similar cording fitted the blouse to the waist curve, so that the general effect was that of a princesse frock with girdle lines of cording.

A fichu of chiffon with double frills bor dering it-the frills corded at the top and tucked at the edges-was folded about the shoulders and knotted at the breast, with short frilled ends falling over the blouse front. Close little sleeves of corded chiffon reached half way to the elbow and ended there in double frills of chiffon, and these sleeves, fitting quite snugly, allowed for the shoulder draping of the ruffled fichu without bunchiness. The décolletage was slightly pointed, although compara-

For the fourth gown, black tulle, paillette in black had been chosen. The most striking feature of its construction was the bold appliqué design in black panne velvet which bordered deeply the bottom of the skirt and ran up in four irregular vinelike lines half way to the waist. This applique was a conventionalized would breed monotony were there not so many variations in detail and tone and so many forms of floral trimming. Plain chiffons and silk mousselines with printed floral borders are shown in some very attractive colorings and designs, and are aseful for youthful frocks, requiring little rimming aside from the flower border. Ribbon embroideries, bows, bouillonees, shirred frills, bands, in fact all forms of or embroidery, is popular to a degree that gowns are fashioned from them. A pompadour silk, with a dull white ground dotted

all over with a little woven dot of gleaming satiny white and printed in a loose scattered rose design so blurred and faint that its outlines are hardly traceable, and it seems like a mere dream of a design, is one of the

The flowered chiffons and mousselines.

too, are prettier than ever, but are used less than plain tone sheer stuffs. Plain chiffon or mousseline, with floral applique novelties and a most exquisite one.

or other fanciful designs, is one of the trimmings most frequently seen upon the simpler type of evening frock in chiffon, silk seline, net or lace. A dainty evening frock of pink ilk mousseline, sketched here, has a p ticularly ribbon trimming, have decided vogue, and very narrow ribbon, shirred on one edge

or in bouillonée form, and set on in scroll chiffon, lace, &c., or used as medallions set into plain material with lace or open stitch, or merely applied and framed in tiny ruches or bouillonées of mousseline or lace.

The princesse models are much favored in Paris, and one sees a number of them here, although they are so difficult of successful achievement and depend so largely upon perfection of cut and fitting that they can not be recommended to any woman who cannot employ a first class dressmaker. The very supple clinging velvets especially suggest princesse ideas, and some very handsome princesse gowns in the softest and lightest of broadcloth are shown. There was, for example, the Princess frock sketched here, made in supple white cloth and perfectly plain from hem to bust. A cape collar of real Irish lace falls over the puffed sleeves of white mousseline and turns back in little collar points from the guimpe of mousseline.

A black velvet ribbon encircles the neck, is drawn under the turned back lace points and knotted carelessly in front. Severe to the point of eccentricity, yet in perfect taste, and if faultless of line this is a gown of rare distinction that would throw gorgeous and fussy frocks into the shade.

Of cloth, too, was the visiting frock in delicate pastel blue with large medallions of heavy guipure set into the otherwise plain skirt and a bodice whose rounded bolero had frills of lace falling from under its edges and a shaped collar of lace edged by a narrow line of dark fur. The full sleeves had close, long cuffs of lace in narrow puffs, separated by lines of fur. The close fitting mitten cuff and full

Save for house wear and extraordinarily good blouse feature in the gird e of soft | dressy outside functions, the short elbow pink satin which crosses in the back and is sleeve seen in many of the French visiting All of which is merely by way of prelude velvet in tone, yet with an iridescence that be a protest against the attempt to introgram and with black paillettes outlining it to the bust, where it is finished by a big cuff, more or less trimmed, is used to bring the sleeve down to the desired length. One variation upon this idea is shown in a velvet visiting frock among the sketches, the upper sleeve being of exaggerated fulness, and shirred down its inside seam, while a long cuff of lace ends at the bottom in a frill falling over the band, and at the top in a wider frill of lace standing up against the velvet upper sleeve.

This velvet frock is, by the way, an exexcellent model, chic without being fussy.

The perfectly plain skirt—and the velvet skirts are prone to plainness in the best models-is bordered by fur at the bottom and fur trims the pointed bodice on either side of a full lace vest. This same idea is carried out in a redingote costume and in a Princess grown.

The genuine redingote, very long and ample of skirts, close at the waist and broad at the shoulders, is slightly more in evidence as the winter days go by, but one can still say that our fashion leaders are not enthusiastic over it, and one sees it more often in a ready made costume worn by a would-be fashionable than upon the most modish women. This does not, however, alter the fact that when correctly made it is an elegant garment and that it is very much worn by Parisian élégantes. Some of the smartest of the imported redingotes are very full in both body and skirt with the fulness plaited in to fit the waist snugly, and are worn either with or without a belt or girdle. Luxury in coats and wraps has made tremendous strides and evening cloaks are much to the fore just at present, as accompaniments to the evening frocks in preparation for holiday festivities. One may have one as ornate or as simple as taste may dictate and purse allow, but some of the handsome ones are not remarkably ornate.

There is, for example, the long cape of velvet, slit up the sides to a point between elbow and shoulder so that the arms may pass through, but hanging in perfectly straight lines. It was of velvet in superb quality.

It was bordered on all its edges by a line of real sable. It was lined with the softest and handsomest white brocade, but it was a serviceable evening wrap in comparison with the elaborate confections of chiffon and lace and embroidery fected by many women. Mention has already been made of the graceful cloth cloaks in Arabian burnoose form and in kimono shape, and there are innumerable styles of broadcloth capes, long, enveloping, warm, light in color and andsomely lined, but little trimmed, and perfectly suited to youthful wearers as well as to their elders.

As for the silk cloaks, they are legion, and some of the newest and handsomest are in the new faille, wonderfully soft and lustrous, yet heavy enough to be substantial and durable. No plain silk in the market has a richer effect than this faille, and it gives excellent service.

ook warm enough for attractive winter cloaks, no matter how warmly interlined they may be, and the soft satins and all the lightweight silks of high lustre are ed into service for cloaks much plaited and beflounced and shirred and corded.

The shot satins in the lighter colorings are exceedingly effective for the evening cloak, and velvet and fur trimmings add touches of warmth and richness to even the sheerest of the shimmering silken coats. Look, for instance, at the sketch of a coral pink faille coat whose straight, full folds are finished at the bottom by several lace flounces, headed by waved bands of velvet. The huge sleeves are formed of lace frills separated by velvet and fur bands, and veivet bands form a yoke running to a point in front where are set large cocardes of velvet, from which fall groups of fur tails. There are, too, among the cuts, one of a satin coat in oyster white, with rich trimmings of lace and fur, and another of an empire coat in supple velvet of the new yellow which approaches what we once knew as old gold -a hue especially beautiful in velvet and in combination with dark fur and lace.

CANDY MILLINERY.

A Window Show in the Theatre District That Looks Real, but Isn't. A candy shop in Broadway in the theatre district has a novel window display which attracts a great deal of attention from

READ ANNOUNCEMENT ON THIRD WOMAN'S PAGE. C. C. SHAYNE.

"ALBUMEN CREAM" is meat to the starved wrinkled and flabby complexion. Its effect is cradicating all the evidences of age in a womano longer in her first youth is magical. Price 50, ALBUMEN CREAM Co., 23 East 14th st., N.,

JOS. HEINRICHS, 848 BROADWAY. Headquarters of the best Coffee and Coffee Pots in existence. Wholesale. Retail. Op. Flat Iron Pdg.

women, the candy dealer's best customers. The proprietor of this store has half a dozen women's hats in his window, all of the latest women's hats in his window, all of the latest mode, and all made of candy.

At first sight they look like the creations that really deplete pocketbooks. Naturally they attract attention. Both day and night women stop in front of the store to gaze at them. Some of the women who stop to look at them seem to think they are

The proprietor of the store has no sign on the hats. His candy maker says they are a work of art. They surely are an excellent advertisement.

Poor Opera Glasses Ruin Eyesight.

From the Chicago Tribune. The woman was not old, but she com-plained that her eyesight was failing fast. The oculist was a fatherly looking old gentleman, consequently he felt privileged to put a few questions decidedly personal and apparently non-professional. "Do you go to the theatre often?" he asked. "Once or twice a week."

"In what part of the house do you sit?" "Usually in the top gallery," came the esitating reply.
"And now, what grade of opera glasses do you use?" "I'm afraid," said the woman, "that they are not good. They cost only $2.50."

"I thought so," said the doctor. "That's what's the matter with your eyes. Poor what's the matter with your eyes. Poor opera glasses are ruining them. If I had my way there wouldn't be a cheap pair of opera glasses on the market. They are death to the eyes. A couple of seasons of theatregoing in the top gallery with poor glasses for a steady companion are sure to damage the best pair of eyes in town. Better a hundred times let the glasses alone. If you have a good, strong pair, all rightgo ahead and use them; if not, trust to the naked eye for making out the mysteries of the play. The sight will not suffer half so much.

"Poor glasses will not source properly, and any one who uses them frequently, especially at that distance from the stage, is sowing the seed of headaches, dancing lights and stars, wrinkles, and a host of other ocular infirmities."

Why Women's Shoe Laces Come United.

From the St. Louis Globe-Democrat. "Why is it that a lady's shoe becomes untied so much more frequently and apparently easier than a man's?" repeated J. V. Ladd. the shoe salesman, after me. don't suppose I would be in any better position to answer a question than any one else had it not been for the fact that a few days ago a couple of ladies, customers of my place, were discussing that very point, and their deductions appear to solve the rid-and their deductions appear to solve the riddle perfectly.

"It is not that a woman's shoe laces will not tie in as firm a knot as any other's; the reason for the frequent annoyances to which women are subjected is apart from that.
In the case of high shoes the trouble is altogether in their height. The shoe laces further up on the leg than a man's, usually fits more snuely, and, therefore, encounters a greater strain on the knot when a woman is walking. The result is that it becomes loosened within a very short time, whereas a man may walk all day without the laces of his shoe becoming untied. Where low shoes are worn, the skirts flapping around the ankle do the work of loosening the knot."

Willow Culture in New York State.

From the Clyde Times. One of the crops that has for some time been attracting attention to Lyons and Galen is that of the basket willow, which has grown to considerable dimensions in these two towns. The crop has just been marketed and Clyde and Lyons have the distinction of being two of the most important shipping points for this commodity.

In the two towns named it is estimated that there are nearly three hundred acres devoted to the culture of these willows. An devoted to the culture of these willows. An average yield this year was six tons to the acre, and an average price of about $17 per ton was received for the crop that has been sold. Syracuse is the market to which all of the willows grown in this vicinity find their way. When the willows are stripped of their bark and otherwise prepared for manufacturing purposes they are worth about $125 per ton.

It is said that the first willows grown in this part of the country were planted by John A. Blackburn in 1852. Mr. Blackburn came from the South and gained some knowledge of willow culture near his former home in Maryland.

SEVEN GRAND PRIZES

(Highest Awards Obtainable)

BY THE INTERNATIONAL JURY AT ST. LOUIS, TO THE SINGER MANUFACTURING CO.

For FAMILY SEWING MACHINES

Especially for "No. 66" absolutely the lightest running lock-stitch machine in the world. For Embroideries, Laces and Tapestries made on Singer Sewing Machines for family use. For Greatest Progress and

Most Recent Improvements in sewing machines for manufacturing purposes.

Two Hundred Different Sewing Machines shown in Operation for Every Stitching Process.